In this buying guide we cover the most important things to consider and questions to ask yourself.QualityThe quality of electronic dartboards varies a lot more than bristle boards, so this is particularly important to get right. When considering quality, the two things to think about are how well the board holds the darts when they land and how accurately the board records the score. Poor quality boards can have a high proportion of bounce outs and they often don’t register the score when a dart does land. This can be really frustrating, especially given the main reason for buying an electronic board is because it’s supposed to make your life easier!All of the boards in our list pass this test, except the low price Unicorn Electronic Soft Tip Dartboard, which we suggest is good for kids and for those wanting to test out an electronic board before investing in a better board.Power sourceSome electronic dart boards are powered using batteries, while others connect to the mains with a power cable, so you should consider which is right for you.The advantage of battery-powered is that you don’t have to worry about mounting the board near a power socket, and there won’t be any ugly wires going up the wall. On the other hand, the cost of batteries can add up over time and you’ll need to make sure you always have a spare set nearby in case they die mid game!If you're considering buying a board with a power cable, check whether the plug will work with the sockets where you live. If not, you may need to buy an adapter as well.ScoringWhen buying a board, check that it has the games you want to be able to play and that it is able to accommodate the number of players you are likely to be playing with. Some of the boards in our list have dozens of games for up to 16 players!Also make sure you’re happy with the score display on the board. A general rule here is that the bigger it is, the easier it is going to be to read and understand the score.How much does a dartboard cost?As you’ll see in our reviews of the top electronic dart boards, the price of a board can vary enormously, from as little as £20 ($25) up to over £250 ($320). If you go for something at the lower end of that range, you’re almost certainly going to be disappointed. We recommend spending a minimum of £80 ($100) to avoid being let down. Dedicated to providing you with a great game, the Eclipse Pro Bristle Dartboard from Unicorn comes with a design that maximises averages. Endorsed by the PDC and Word Champions, the board is completely staple free with an increased target area, especially in doubles and trebles. - Completely staple-free construction - Ultra-slim segmentation system - Unicorn high tech wiring design - Endorsed by the PDC and Word Champions - Staple-free Bullseye. This particular one has a construction which is entirely staple-free. This feature ensures that the darts land is the right designated areas, with fewer bounce-outs. It has a two-inch thickness and is cleverly designed not to use any staples. The wiring on this board is conventional wires and eclipse pro wires for better performance and scoring. The whole unit features a smart and compact design that allows for many people to play simultaneously. This is a championship quality product with high-quality, durable materials. The spider technology leaves hardly any bounce back and gets you a better score and larger score area. This is a completely constructed staple-free and has unicorn high technology wiring design to make it more durable. Eclipse Pro has everything a good dartboard needs: staple-free and sharp wiring and bullseye to prevent bounce outs, a rotatable number ring, and durable materials. The increased target area is great for beginners and less skilled darts players This dartboard of Unicorn has a completely staple-free bull’s eye. It will not fall off and is sealed properly. This official tournament-grade dartboard is made from self-healing sisal fibers with ultra-slim wiring and staple-free construction to maximize averages. If you are a heavy thrower you may experience the dart almost or actually hitting the back of the board and that "Bopp" sounds. Not for kids as it use steel tip darts A bit of an unfinished look The coloring in certain areas looks blotchy and uneven The board surface is softer and made for light throwers. The outer metal ring occasionally pops out The game of darts actually offers several benefits, including increased hand-eye coordination and improved concentration. Of course, the game is also fun and a great way to let off some steam after a busy day at work or school. As you search for the best dartboard, keep the following features in mind. Consider the age range of the person you are buying the dartboard for. There are magnetic models for small children, which is a safe way to get them started with the game. Teens and adults would do best with a premium-grade sisal dartboard, as these are self-healing. Determine where you want to set the dartboard up. If you have a fancier entertainment space, you’ll want to go with a set that sits inside a cabinet. A garage or basic game room would do just fine with an open dartboard, but you’ll need to review the mounting equipment. Some are a little more difficult to install than others and require the use of a measuring tape. If you’re searching for a model that is easier to set up, go with one that uses a triple wheel lock-and-level system, as it can attach to any surface in seconds. Review any added features last. For example, a movable number ring has multiple benefits. It allows you to increase your gameplay, while also keeping players from putting too many holes in one section. There are even dartboards on the market that come with complimentary game guides, as well as models that have scoreboards and a set of chalk for keeping tabs on who’s winning. Review the product packaging to determine who easy or hard the dartboard is to install. Check the weight of the board, as some boards are heavy and not safe for use with small children. Keep in mind that some bards are better suited for light throwers, while others are more ideal for hard throwers. Set up your dartboard in a location that is nice and dry and never use a liquid to clean the board. Moisture will destroy the dartboard. Darts are not always included. If the model you’re interested in doesn’t include a set of darts, you’ll want to factor the price of the darts into your overall purchase. While dartboards are often competitively priced, you’ll want to check exactly what you’re getting for the cost. Of course, models for children, like the Marky Sparky Kid-Safe Indoor Magnetic Dartboard, aren’t going to amount to as much as adult sets. When it comes to adult dartboards, you’ll find the Viper by GLD Regulation Bristle Steel Tip Dartboard has a more secure mounting system, the STREET WALK Magnetic Dartboard comes with a magnetic darts and the Squad Hero Illuminated Kids Safe Magnetic Dartboard offers a built-in USB port.
